Diversity

If you are a member of a community that has historically been underrepresented in higher education and would like to tell us how this particular perspective adds to the value you will contribute to the diverse learning community we strive to create, please do so here:

The more disadvantaged labels on you, the less visibility and resources you get. This is what I learned from the intersectionality of my Asian, Female, and LGBTQ+ identities. Many people who face intersectionality are struggling with the lack of support networks and educational resources. Most of the time, we have to fight against self-denial and deal with discrimination and harassment alone. With the experiences of non-government organizations, I realize that visibility is the key solution to empower a community, gain resources, and connect the supporting networks. By integrating my life experiences, abilities, and skills I will learn to increase the visibility of the communities I belong to, I can speak out for people with intersectional identities and provide valuable insights into the diverse learning community.
